The song refers to the war on drugs, the treatment of black people by the police, racism (explicitly to black and white people in America), the continuation of poverty and the accompanying vicious cycle of value in urban African American culture, and the difficulties of life in the ghetto. The production and recording of The Song was originally recorded during his tenure at Interscope Records in 1992 and was produced by Big D Impossible (Deon Evans). Changes later remixed in 1998 poke from Trackmasters. The song re-uses the lines I Wonder If Heaven Got Ghetto, which was recorded the same year, and samples from the 1986 hit How It's Bruce Hornsby and The Range. The choir Way It Is was slightly recast and sang by Talent and used this song. From time to time, Tupac re-used lines for other unreleased songs because he planned to make an updated version later. But since his death, many unreleased and unmanened songs have been officially released. The remixed version, released in 1998, is significantly different from the percussion and some minor changes to musical elements. The chorus of the original track features a significant difference in the vocal sample line, This is the case and that's the way it is, from Run DMCs It's Like This, which is also played twice during the intro. Another chorus adds ice cube line, Dope dealers, you're as bad as the police, his song, Our. The third chorus leaves out the Ice Cube sample and adds a B-boy-style song with an unknown person who repeats: Clap your hands and feel it, clap your hands and feel it! until the song ends. Samples of the song is an interpretation of the 1986 hit Way It's by Bruce Hornsby and The Range, and was further influenced by the 1972 hit Changes to The Black Sabbath. Bay Area rapper E-40 had interpreted the song already on its way, Things'll Never Change, his album Tha Hall of Game. Tupac Changes instrumental was used in Crazy Clown Posse in Mother Song, a Mother's Day song. Nas tried the song for his song Black President. Polo G Interpolated Changes to his 2020 song Wishing Hero. Changes to 2pac also especially samples the drum loop song Set It Off by Strafe (1984). The review of The Song was #1 hits in Norway and the Netherlands and reached the top 10 in several other countries in the singles rankings, including #3 in the UK, which received a wider audience for Tupac. Released posthumously from his album The Great Hits, the song speaks to all the different issues associated with Tupac's era of influence - particularly racism, police brutality, drugs and gang violence. Huey, that 2Pac mentions the song (two shots in the dark, now Huey dead) is Huey P. Newton, founder of the Black Panther Party. [2] The song refers to the possibility of a black president of the United States, arguing we are not ready. In addition, the last verse of the song refers to Tupac's imagining himself being shot to death, mimicking the sound of a gun with the phrase rat-a-tat-tat-tat. The Chris Hafner-directed music video is a collection of several previous music videos Tupac released in addition to home movies and never-before-seen images, similar to the form of Notorious B.I.G.'s Dead, also released in 1999. Critical reception Chuck Taylor of Billboard wrote: This latest posthumous Tupac Shakur release is an undeniable smash. Cleverly sampling Bruce Hornsby and Range's No 1 Way It Is from 1986, the rapper masterfully speaks to his disciples as a pastor to deliver a motivational and positive sermon to his congregation. He talks about trials and trials in the ghetto of life and is blunt about the need for change and the end of black violence, saying that false hatreds are a disgrace to races. This story is a must for every playlist and ironic that his all-important message surfaces after the artist became a victim of what his song addresses. At the 2000 Grammy Awards, Changes was nominated for best Rap Solo Performance and remains the only posthumous song nominated in that category. It was also nominated for the MTV Video Music Award for Best Editing Video &amp; Best Rap Video 1999.
